SHE SEEKS TO PUT $50,000 TARIFF ON FIGHTING AL'S LOVE

Making love and fighting against President Wilson's downward revision of the tariff at one and the same time, will, if pretty Gladys Bergman, eighteen year old, has her way in the Supreme Court, prove a costly experience for Albert Kaufherr, millionaire member of the leather firm of Kaufherr & Co. of No. 43 Lincoln Park, Newark.

Miss Bergman, through her attorney, Abraham Levy, of Levy & Unger, No. 115 Broadway, filed a suit for breach of promise against Kaufherr in the Supreme Court today, fixing the tariff on her aching heart at $50,000. Kaufherr denies all of Miss Bergman's allegations.

"I was only sixteen years old when

I met Mr. Kaufherr," Miss Bergman said today. "A mutual friend introduced us at a house party, where we were both guests and, became very fond of Albert. He was very attentive to me. He began to shower me with expensive boxes of candy and flowers.

"I had really never been accustomed to such things. He asked me to go with him to luncheons and dinners at the Astor, the Knickerbocker and McAlpin. Albert did not dance, but I enjoyed the tango and the turkey trot and he never objected to my dancing with others.

"I had been reared in a humble home and his attentions to me turned my head. He moved in the best social circles and belonged to smart clubs. I met his brother, Maurice, too, and he called me his 'Little Sister.' Wherever Albert went he managed to call me at least once a day on the telephone. He wrote many lovely letters.

"When Congress took up the tariff revision, Albert was selected as a representative of the Newark tanning interests to go to Washington and represent them. He wrote me letters all the time. That is how he got the pet name of 'Fighting Al.' It was the name I gave him because I admired the way in which he fought.

"Almost every day he was in Washington he wrote me these lovely letters and signed himself 'Fighting Al.' He liked poetry, and soon after we began to correspond he wrote me nothing but poetry and asked me to write him in the same way. I have forgotten most of the poetry and the letters were turned over to Mr. Levy. But he was quite a poet in spite of what people say about daffy lovers' poets.

"He called me 'Girly' and 'Dearest' and he referred to our little love affairs as 'battles.' He was quite romantic for a big business man. We talked about marriage constantly and he always told me that as soon as I was of age he would wed me. But when I finally pressed him to marry me, last month, he said he couldn't and gave me no reason."

JULIUS HARBURGER BURIED.

The funeral of Julius Harburger, former Sheriff, took place today from his home, No. 48 St. Mark's place. It was attended by men from many walks of life, including jurists, politicians, actors and pugilists. Capt. Sweeney and twenty policemen from the Fifth street station kept the crowd of 2,000 people in order.

After an eulogy by the Rev. Dr. Rudolph Brooman of the Temple Methodist Church, the casket was borne to an automobile hearse between two lines of seventy-five members of the Masonic order.

The honorary pallbearers were John R. Voorhis, Commissioner of Election; Thomas F. McAvoy, William Dalton,
